ADVENTURES IN TORAH STUDY

If you've been on our email list to receive Rabbi David Fohrman's weekly series on Cain and Abel, you won't want to miss this new adventure in Torah study. Fohrman, who is a professor of Biblical Themes at Johns Hopkins University, has just launched a fascinating new series of weekly classes via the internet. Each week, you'll get access to a specially recorded audio lecture (about 45-50 minutes long), slideshows, discussion boards, lecture outlines and source notes. Here's your chance to begin a guided adventure through a multimedia experience of a pivotal event in biblical Jewish history.

You can hear a free sample class by going to www.jewishtextstudy.org and clicking on the "Listen to Sample Class" tab at the top of the page. The lecture you'll get to hear is entitled "The Hidden Structure of the Ten Commandments." Or if you prefer, visit our website, www.ajspirit.com, to sign up for a free month of the class.

Also by Rabbi Fohrman, is a whole series of CD's and tapes on such topics as "Is it Kosher to Argue with God?" (8 cassettes) and "Coming to Grips with the Binding of Isaac" (7 cassettes). All are available at www.jewishexplorations.com.

Talmud + iPod = ShasPod

Now, the eternal wisdom of our oral tradition has been merged with the hottest craze in digital music. Fresh on the market is the ShasPod, a 20 gigabyte iPod that comes fully loaded with 2,711 audio classes covering the entire Talmud, one page at a time. Replacing about 2,000 cassette tapes is one device that will satisfy your Talmud-study needs for the next seven and a half years, guiding you through a whole shelf full of heavy books.

The word "Shas" in Hebrew is an acronym for "the six orders" and refers to the six sections of the Talmud. Since 1923, Jews around the world have been following the same "daily page" (English for Daf Yomi) schedule, finishing all of Shas in about seven and a half years. With each cycle, the number of participants has grown and the access to classes has taken new forms. After the new ShasPod, one can only imagine how the Talmud will appear next.
